University of California, Berkeley

CURRENT EMPLOYMENT

Samuelson Law, Technology & Public Policy Clinic, School of Law (Boalt Hall), University of California, Berkeley, Acting Clinical Professor and Director

One of the first clinical education programs to offer students the opportunity to represent the public's interest in the Internet and other emerging technologies. Through the Clinic and the accompanying seminar students gain firsthand experience in the practice of public interest law. Working with institutional and individual clients on a range of issues including privacy, freedom of speech, and copyright, the Clinic students participate in federal and state legislative and regulatory proceedings, litigation, and technical-standard settings.

PRIOR EMPLOYMENT

Center for Democracy and Technology, Staff Counsel, Washington, D.C.

CDT is a leading voice advancing free speech, individual privacy and democratic values on the Internet and other new interactive communications media. I was primarily responsible for CDT's work to improve legal and technical protections for individual privacy. Through policy development, interface with the technical and business communities, grassroots organizing, and public education I pressed for public policies that enhance individual control over personal information in the Digital Age. My responsibilities included developing policy positions, analyzing legislation and regulations, participating in standard technical standard setting processes, research and writing, public speaking, communicating with press, and building coalitions with other public interest organizations and the business community to address privacy concerns. I have written and/or presented testimony before Congress, State legislatures, and administrative agencies on a variety of privacy and First Amendment issues. I have been involved with the technical community on a variety of technical standards issues, most notably the World Wide Web Consortium's Platform for Privacy Preferences. I have served on federal and private sector advisory committees on privacy issues. In addition I have assisted with development work—authoring funding proposals and brochures, and contributing to annual reports. December 1994 through present.

(From September 1994 through December 1994, I was employed at the Electronic Frontier Foundation working on similar issues. In December 1994 the policy group of EFF founded CDT.)

American Civil Liberties Union, Privacy and Technology Project, Law Clerk, Washington, D.C.

Worked extensively on the issues of privacy, confidentiality and security of health care information. Responsible for organizing and conducting meetings at sites across the country on the privacy implications of large scale health care information data systems. Work included: providing briefings on legal and policy issues of automation of health care information; formulating practical technological and policy solutions to complex privacy issues; researching and writing reports containing recommendations for addressing the automation of health care information with supporting interpretation and analysis of state and federal statutes, case law, and policy rationales. Additional responsibilities included: speaking on behalf of the project at conferences and meetings; writing briefing papers, and attending meetings to inform congressional representatives of civil liberty issues presented by federal legislation; and writing legal memoranda analyzing the privacy issues presented by developing technologies and recommending positions to be adopted by the project. May 1992 through May 1994.

Miller & Chevalier, Summer Associate, Washington, D.C.

Researched and wrote legal memoranda on issues of federal common law, tax and international trade. Drafted office policy on family and medical leave to comply with Federal and D.C. statutes. Summer 1993.

Washington Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights, Employment Discrimination Section, Summer Associate, Washington, D.C.

Interviewed potential plaintiffs for class action suit based on sex discrimination (The D.C. Prison case). Researched class certification requirements. Researched issues of sex discrimination, specifically, hostile work environment and government regulations prohibiting sexual favoritism in the workplace. Wrote memoranda summarizing research findings. Assisted plaintiffs with the filing of complaints with the D.C. Office of Human Rights. Drafted preliminary complaint for class action suit. Summer 1993.
